UC space reallocation ignores SUB plan

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The first month of 1980 saw the University Center rocked by what could be called a campus version of the Old West's bitter range wars. The issue was space, and the battle was fought over which student groups got to use it.

The conflict erupted after years of wrangling by the Student Union Board over the creation of a long-range plan for the UC, one that would give more student groups office space.

Groups already having space and groups that wanted it vied for offices in the UC. One organization, the Women's Resource Center, protested what it felt could be unfair treatment in the space shuffle.

In late January, a cease-fire of sorts was called. SUB presented its reallocation plan to Central Board. It was accepted.

RAY CHAPMAN

The plan had two major facets. The first was a list of offices that would receive priority during the reallocation process.

Also, SUB mandated a deadline for the completion of the projects—September 1980. Yet September has come and gone, and only one of the originally-planned moves has taken place.

The plan—which was forged in such bitter controversy—has been changed.

Not only has the original time limit on the projects been ignored, but most of the moves mandated by SUB and CB have not taken place. Instead, a series of compromises have been made.

Confusion reigns over who controls UC space

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

One thing apparently shared by people involved in University Center planning is confusion over just who legally controls building policy.

According to ASUM by-laws, the UC is controlled by the Student Union Board.

"Student Union Board shall . . . make, interpret and generally administrate building policies and regulate space usage in the University Center," the by-laws state.

UC Director Ray Chapman is given a non-voting position on SUB, according to the by-laws.

Chapman, however, sees it differently.

"There's no question as to who makes policy here," Chapman said. "The Board of Regents has final authority. The president has to approve any of my recommendations. And I am paid to make decisions on what recommen-

And according to sources at SUB, both the board and UC Director Ray Chapman knew for some time that many of the original mandates would be postponed.

But the plan was never rewritten: CB has yet to be officially informed of the changes.

The original plan adopted by SUB called for a major shift in offices, which would cause various student groups to hopscotch around the UC to obtain space.

Top priority in the reallocation was given to the movement of Legal Services from its present office (room 164 South) to rooms 111 and 112, the present home of Graphic Services.

To make room for Legal Services, Graphics would be moved into room 164 North, the former home of the Women's Resource Center.

The WRC and the Student Action Center would be shuffled to room 119, replacing the Outdoor Resources Center.

And ORC would be re-established in room 127, the former television lounge.

This original plan, however, was soon to change.

Following the adoption of the SUB plan, both the Women's Resource Center and the Student Action Center attempted to find a compromise. Apparently, neither group felt that sharing room 119 was acceptable.

SAC emerged with a compromise that would allow its office to remain with ASUM, and let the WRC take room 119 for itself.

According to SUB member Walter Congdon, the board agreed to the SAC-WRC compromise.

Central Board was reportedly not involved in the negotiations.

"That area that SAC wanted to remain in was left pretty much under SUB control," Congdon said. "We weren't required to consult with CB."

But this was only the first of a number of modifications to the original plan that was made by SUB and Chapman apparently without official CB approval.

The second major change was to axe the September time limit for the reallocation plan.

This started with Chapman's depiction of the time limit as "unrealistic."

"I told SUB that most construction and design around here takes anywhere from a year to a year and one-half," Chapman said.

Congdon agreed that the time limit was unrealistic, and said that SUB was aware of the problem.

"We used the September deadline as a target date," Congdon said, "something to shoot for."

When asked why the plan wasn't rewritten to include a new time limit, Congdon said it was unnecessary.

"You know human nature," he said. "When you say you'll do something in five minutes, you try harder to get it done soon. When you say you'll do something in an hour, you don't push as hard."

A contract, signed by Chapman, then-SUB Chairman Andrew Czorny and then-ASUM President Cary Holmquist concerning the reallocation plan, contains language that gives SUB and Chapman considerable power over the time agreement.

Signed February 7, the contract mandates that reallocation be carried out "... subject to the Montana state planning and construction process and obvious restraints of time and available funds."

But Congdon said that all of the groups involved in the reallocation plan were informed that the time limit was being changed.

Bruce Barrett, the attorney for Legal Services, disagrees. He said he was never told the time limit wasn't being followed.

Congdon also said that every group involved in the reallocation knew during Spring Quarter that the plan was being delayed.

But Barrett—whose office was to have received top priority during the reallocation—didn't know about the changes until well into the summer.

"Other offices, such as the WRC and the ORC, were informed about their moves," Barrett said. "But I just heard by word of mouth that Legal Services wasn't going to be moving."

Barrett said he petitioned Chapman for extra space to take the load off his crowded office. The request was granted.

So as it stands now, only the WRC has been moved according to plan.

The Legal Services office was granted temporary space next door to their present one. A temporary wall will be used to divide the space from another temporary office, that one used by the Outdoor Resources Center.

Outdoor Resources Center, instead of being moved to the revamped television room, was granted space in room 164.

Graphic Design Services will retain its present office until its new space is refitted.

And Chapman said he is not sure how long these offices will stay in the limbo of temporary space.

The UC Director said that the moves will have to wait until the building gets some more money.

"We've had problems here this year that put us somewhat behind," Chapman said.

One problem was that UC earnings from 1979-80 were apparently lower than expected.

"First, there was a student boycott of services last year that cost us money," Chapman said.

"Also, the cleanup of the fallout from Mt. St. Helen's cost quite a bit."

The overall loss of earnings was estimated by Chapman as close to $30,000.

Also, in a letter to ASUM President Dave Curtis, Chapman stated that other remodeling projects in the building have helped drain the UC's coffers.

The letter stated that a combination of construction costs and bids for the remodeling of the Copper Commons and food service were at least $28,000 higher than he had anticipated.

The combination of these expenses apparently delivered the knock-out punch to the projected time schedule of the SUB plan.

"The Legal Service-Graphics move is going to be expensive," Chapman commented, adding "the new Graphics room has to be refitted with special lighting and ventilation."

"The original plan hasn't been

Decision on LA window plan postponed

By STEPHANIE HANSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

A definite decision to redesign the windows in the Liberal Arts Building in an effort to conserve energy has been postponed so that other alternatives may be considered, according to a state administrator.

The decision to delay any action is a "very smart move," ASUM President David Curtis said.

Philip Hauck said that definite action on the plan will be decided within a month so that modification can be completed by next May, a deadline set by the Department of Energy.

The decision to postpone any action on the modification proposal was made "for the sake of being more cooperative," Hauck said.

The $400,000 proposal originally involved reducing window area in the building by 76 percent, adjusting the heat-control system and ventilation and replacing the lights with fluorescent ones.

Some suggested alternatives to the project include using insulative curtains or thermo-pane glass for the windows. Passive solar heating has also been suggested. Faculty members have said that simple maintenance of the building would also save considerable energy.

Both faculty and student opposition to the original plan was strong. Several faculty members called the plan "unreasonable" at two informational meetings held last week, while Curtis hinted at possible student vandalism of the windows.

However, faculty reaction to the decision is cautious.

Richard Vandiver, associate professor of sociology, said that the decision to postpone action was "inevitable." But, he said, he hopes that the state architect's

Curtis failing Legislative Studies 101

ASUM President David Curtis is neglecting his homework.

At Friday's legislative Interim Finance Committee hearing on a proposed alternative to the 19:1 student-faculty ratio used to fund the University of Montana, Curtis' lack of preparation was embarrassingly apparent.

Curtis' testimony came toward the end of a four-hour hearing during which a slate of UM administrators, faculty, staff and students expressed thoughtfully and intelligently their criticisms and suggestions concerning the proposed funding formula. The committee was getting the information and the kinds of comments it had requested. UM was making a good showing with a committee that has a lot to say about its future.

Enter David Curtis.

Curtis expressed the requisite thank-yous and then launched into his presentation—a presentation that was to represent the views of the entire student body.

The committee, Curtis said, must "not lose sight of our true goal—higher education." So far, so good. He then proceeded to tell the committee that it is "the educated people that are going to solve the problems of our state."

Apparently Curtis did not realize to whom he was speaking.

Four of the 10 committee members have not attended an institution of higher education. They are self-educated, proud of it AND, as legislators, have played key roles in attempting to solve the problems of our state.

Two of these "uneducated" committee members, in particular, have done much to shape higher education in Montana. Rep. Francis Bardanoue, D-Harlem, is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, the committee which approves the budget for the state—and the university system.

Rep. Carroll South, D-Miles City, is chairman of the Interim Finance Committee and of the Appropriations Joint Subcommittee on Education—the committee which recommends UM's budget and will use any new funding formula the interim committee endorses.

But Curtis' implied, though certainly not intentional, insult to these legislators, was not the only problem with his testimony. More painful was that his presentation simply was not what the committee asked for. Unlike every other person who spoke, Curtis neither criticized nor applauded any specific provision of the proposed formula.

For 16 months, the committee has been working on alternatives to the funding formula. For 16 months, the committee has also been planning on visiting the six campuses in the state and expecting to hear specific suggestions or complaints about the formula.

Curtis, then, had plenty of warning that he would be expected to discuss specifics. He said yesterday that he chose not to because he felt it was his responsibility to remind the committee members that the big picture is education. It is too easy, he said, to "quibble" about ratios and flawed information.

"I wanted to remind people what it is we're doing here," Curtis said.

A committee whose mission is to study an alternative to funding higher education needs to be reminded that higher education is important? If they didn't think it was, they wouldn't have spent 16 months and hours of work on coming up with an alternative.

Curtis' presentation succeeded in reinforcing—if not further damaging—the poor image legislators already have of UM students.

As ASUM president, Curtis is one of the few students at UM legislators will come to know. The impression he makes is likely to be the one they remember and use as a basis for determining what the rest of the student body is like. He has the responsibility to do his best to provide legislators with the kind of information they need.

He will have other chances when the 1981 Legislature convenes in January. It is a session which last week Curtis said "could be the most important year in 50 years in the Legislature for the university."

Obviously, Curtis recognizes the importance of the session, just as he undoubtedly recognizes the importance of the funding study. But he's going to have to go one step further and deliver what's expected of him.

We, the students, have a right to demand that he, our elected representative, do his best to be prepared to testify before the Legislature in Helena—or that he stay home.

Double-talk

Editor: Every registered voter should receive the voter information pamphlet, which gives the complete text of Initiative 84 with arguments FOR and AGAINST with rebuttals. Rather than ride over the same ground, I will try to clarify some points of contention.

First, it would be silly to try to pass a law which would ban uranium mining. Any law which banned uranium mining would entitle every holder of an interest in uranium to just compensation for the taking of their mineral. I pointed out last May in a letter to the Missoulian that the Montana Mining Association was trying to build a case for the argument that Initiative 84 is a ban on uranium mining so that their members could sue the state for "just compensation." This embarrassed the Montana Mining Association, which then issued a press release on June 7 stating that "the Association does not intend to go to court over Initiative 84 should it pass."

But sure enough, after the initial denial was forgotten, articles on Sept. 28 in the Montana Standard, Missoulian and Independent-Record quote John Squyres, uranium exploration manager for Amoco Minerals of Denver, predicting that some mineral owners will take the state to court to recover lost value if the initiative passes. Unfortunately for Amoco, that argument won't work. Constitutional lawyers who helped draft Initiative 84 made sure that mining is not even regulated, let alone prohibited, by Initiative 84. Also, the Attorney General wrote the ballot wording, and if it were a ban on uranium mining he would have said so. It is not.

Economic recovery of any mineral, including uranium, is a function of demand. As we used up our hematite ore for iron, we turned to lower grade taconite ore. So it will be with uranium. Colorado uranium ore is already being shipped 300 miles to a mill site in New Mexico. The United States has previously imported uranium ore as low grade as 3 percent from Africa. Thus, when the demand for uranium is strong, it is economically feasible to ship it to an existing millsite.

But of course, we must expect industry to challenge any significant law. Therefore, the law must be constitutionally correct—a quality which protected our coal severance tax through the Montana Supreme Court. Now a court challenge has been filed against our provisions for surface owner consent, which took the power of condemnation away from coal companies. We must expect a challenge to our law forbidding the disposal of radioactive waste. Initiative 84 removes unconstitutional discrimination against out-of-state residents and large quantity producers from our present law.

Finally, opponents of Initiative 84 contend that Montana already has sufficient environmental laws, constitutional or not, to protect us. But they fight such laws every step of the way. Even now the Montana Mining Association demands, in a letter to legislative candidates, that the Commissioner of State Lands "should have no authority over mills and tailings." Enough of this double-talk!

People not positions

Editor:

The headline on page 3 of the Oct. 1 issue of the Kaimin reported "16 positions—not people—cut."

For your information and others, I am a PEOPLE, and my position was terminated. Since when are two persons within the School of Education, who have both received their termination notices, no longer considered to be PEOPLE? Does it not seem strange to you and others that only two PEOPLE out of 16 positions are affected by the cuts? Does it not seem strange to you and others that these same PEOPLE are under Dean Yee's leadership within the School of Education?

Park rangers shoot male grizzly believed to have killed camper

WEST GLACIER (AP)—Results of tests conducted on the carcass of a grizzly bear suspected of having killed a "born-again Christian," in Glacier National Park were not expected to be available until at least today.

Joe Shellenberger, acting park superintendent, said yesterday that the bear killed by rangers turned out to be a 378-pound male, not a female as originally thought. The bear was killed Sunday morning about six miles from where the mauled body of Laurence Gordon, 33, of Dallas, was found earlier last weekend.

Shellenberger said the carcass of the bear was sent to a pathologist in Great Falls and then would be shipped to the state Laboratory at Montana State University in Bozeman.

Gordon's body was found Friday afternoon near the shore of Elizabeth Lake in the rugged northeast corner of Glacier about 10 miles from the Canadian border.

Park ranger Bob Frauson said the bear was shot from a helicopter near Helen's Lake in the Upper Belly River drainage following a widespread search. He said rangers narrowed their search after they found bear droppings that contained "what looked like human tissue and boot samples." Frauson said the boot fragments appeared to match the boots worn by Gordon.

An acquaintance of Gordon's said the Texan "had a message that the whole world could listen to."

Bill Crockford, who owns a hotel in Cut Bank, near the park, said he met Gordon just a few days before Gordon began what was to have been a four-day backcountry camping trip in Glacier.

"We did not have any room in the hotel, but my wife said he ought to stay here with our family," Crockford said. "He got to know people in Cut Bank in just a few days."

According to Crockford, Gordon told him he formerly had worked as an airline pilot in Dallas and at a retirement home in Oregon but had quit work to travel and was hitchhiking around the country.

"Flying around the world, he had seen much of Europe, Asia and the Middle East," said Crockford. "But he felt it was about time to see his own country."

Rangers found a small pocket Bible in the pair of cut-off jeans that Gordon was wearing when he was killed by the bear.

"He became a personal friend, although we knew him only a few days," said Crockford.

"He was a great believer of the power of God's word. That was his message on earth."

Crockford said Gordon was traveling only with what he could carry on his back, including a small stove he used to heat food and tea.

"He was not afraid of traveling and going into the park," Crockford said. "We had warned him about the bears, but he had trust in the Lord and was not afraid. He will be missed, but will be remembered."

Gordon was the sixth person killed by grizzlies in the 71-year history of Glacier National Park but the third already in 1980, the worst year ever in the park for fatal attacks by grizzlies.

The truth is, we are all caught in a great economic system which is heartless.

Experimental computer program may reduce scheduling conflicts

By STEPHANIE HANSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Student reaction is mixed to a new computerized form of section scheduling this fall at the University of Montana.

University of Montana Mathematics Professor Hien Nguyen has worked for three years to improve an experimental system of computerized scheduling in the mathematics department. Nguyen explained that this registration process, especially for large and introductory classes, uses faculty time more efficiently and offers students a more flexible way to schedule.

Several students interviewed thought the new process worked "pretty well." However, a common objection voiced by some students was the problem of not knowing when their particular section was scheduled before they left registration.

Two multiple-section mathematics classes—104 and 107—used the computer this fall. The process involved taking individual student preferences for section times and trying to match each student with his first choice.

Christine Carson, sophomore in general studies, said she thought the system was "kind of screwy." Because she did not know when her section was scheduled until the following Monday, she could not give a definite class schedule to places where she was applying for a job.

Nguyen said the delay was inherent, especially this fall, since registration was completed at the end of the week. For any other quarter, he said, registration is finished in the middle of the week and students would know their section time the following day. As it was, the computer program was completed and posted Friday evening, although students were not told to allow the department some leeway if problems developed, Nguyen said.

Other departments on campus offering large classes or lab periods stand to benefit from this type of scheduling. Nguyen has been given release time by the administration this fall to work with any interested departments on a computer program tailored to that department's needs for next winter's registration.

The mathematics department conducted the program by having students taking Math 104 and 107 fill out a class section preference form after registering. The student determined his first, second and third choice for a section time based on open periods he had left.

When registration was completed on Friday, the program was fed into a computer. The program then adjusted student requests and section availability to best match a student with his first choice.

The mathematics faculty is "really enthusiastic" about the potential such computerized scheduling has, according to Howard Reinhardt, professor of mathematics. And numbers seem to indicate the process works, he said.

Of 391 students who registered for Math 104, 309 received their first choice. Seventy-five students were given their second choice and only six were scheduled according to their third choice. One student's request was rejected by the computer since he did not indicate a second or third choice.

In the Math 107 sections, 176 students were given their first choice. Fifty-two students were assigned to their second choice and 18 to their third.

As it now stands, Reinhardt said, the student faces a "seller's market" in the existing first-come, first-served registration process. The computerized process minimizes that alphabetical prejudice and schedules class sections on the basis of demand and student preferences, he said.

However, the new scheduling process would not "tread" on departmental decisions regarding individual faculty teaching times, Nguyen said.

Nguyen said he was concerned about a possible misconception that the computer dictates to faculty when they will teach a class. In fact, Nguyen said, he adjusts the program so that constraints such as faculty and classroom availability are already taken into account. That way, if the computer needs to add another section to handle heavy student demand for a certain section, a faculty member is already known to be willing and available to teach that section—a process unique to Nguyen's program.

Another important advantage, Nguyen said, is that computerized scheduling eliminates closed sections in the traditional sense. The only way a section could be closed, he said, is if one was not offered because of classroom or faculty unavailability. Computerized scheduling also allows for more balanced class sizes, Nguyen added.

Registrar Philip Bain said he is very happy with the computerized process. He said he hopes it can be refined further to make it an official option for section scheduling for many departments on campus.

Virginia City Players' vaudeville a hit

By AMY STAHL
Montana Kaimin Fine Arts Editor

A high-energy, fast-paced combination of musical comedy, vaudevilian slapstick and sensitive ballads highlight the Virginia City Players production of "Turn of the Century Variety Performance" which is currently playing in Missoula at the Carousel Lounge at 2200 Stephens.

Under the direction of Bruce Hurlbut, a University of Montana graduate with a bachelor's degree in music, the six-member cast seem to laugh along with their audience while performing this lively and versatile two-act production.

An exuberant performance by Rhonda Smith as an anxious bride inquiring of the audience, "Does Anyone Want to Take Arthur's Place?" and a soliloquy reminiscent of a Robert Service poem, played by John Hosking, are two scenes that shine in the first act.

The second act, entitled "Cabin Fever Cabaret," is an original contemporary program of song and dance by Hurlbut.

Flavored with melodies about the Old West, including one about Montana, the second act is less predictable and more innovative than the first act's old-time scenarios.

Kathie Harris is outstanding in a scene in which she plays young "Baby Blue" who is accompanied by three vocal men in goggles and tank tops who are "swimming" across the stage.

Another crowd favorite was Hosking's portrayal of a greased-up teen idol singing an ode to "Venus DeMilo," supported by the rest of the cast as adoring fans.

The show is performed on a proscenium stage, which with three sides exposed to the audience, lends itself to a minimal amount of sets and easy movement of performers from the stage into the audience.

The Players, whose summer productions are staged in the Virginia City Opera House in Virginia City, Mont., are part of a theatrical tradition that began in the 1870s during the height of the Alder gold rush.

Theater dwindled with the town of Virginia City when the gold ran out, but it was revived in the 1940s and the Players have continued to provide Montana with lively entertainment for the last 33 years.

The Virginia City Players will be on tour through October and November and will be traveling to Dillon, Deer Lodge, Billings and Spokane. Their last production this season in Missoula will be this evening at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4.50 for adults and $2.25 for children.

For information call the Carousel at 543-7500 or 1-843-5349 in Virginia City.

Eiko and Koma—'inner energy' dancing

By STEPHANIE LINDSAY
Montana Kaimin Reviewer

I never did like avant-garde dance. In the first place, I usually do not know what is going on and I have this unreasonable desire to understand the un-understandable. And for some reason it seems as if both dancers and choreographers of this dance genre take the easy way out. By this I mean it always seems that at some time during the choreographic process the so-called creative juices petered out, so the choreographer arbitrarily threw in what I fondly refer to as "the boring part." This is the part where absolutely nothing happens—the dancers simply stop moving, the music stops, the dancers inexplicably stare at infinity and the audience stares at the dancers quietly wondering, "What does this mean?" and waits for something, anything to happen.

The Eiko and Koma concert last Saturday evening had lots of non-moving dance, lots of silence, lots of infinity-staring. And the concert was excellent. Well, life is full of contradictions!

Only one piece, entitled "White Dance," was presented. In form, it is structurally perfect. Very seldom does dance of this genre tell a story, but "White Dance" does. It is a story of the short-lived moth. The silences, infinity-staring and non-movement are totally apropos because they are a basic ingredient of the story—punctuated by colorful costumes, simple lighting, phrases of intense music and splashes of unrestrained and very exciting dancing. The dance is a perfect example of east meeting west. The result is total harmony, the perfect blending of two cultures.

The audience appeal of Eiko and Koma goes farther than mere charisma. These two gifted artists have an inner energy that literally demands the attention of their viewers. The slightest tilt of the head or flutter of the wrist is an indescribable experience. At times, a movement may only be hinted at and it is more fulfilling that the most intricate virtuoso dancing. There is a moment at the beginning of the program where Eiko moves the fingers of her hands with such delicacy it takes the breath away. This is a gift not learned or acquired, but inherent.

There is another time—a silent minute—in the dance that was also exquisite. Koma, dressed in red, stands behind Eiko, the stage dark except for a soft spotlight lighting his face. Eiko somewhat shadowed, leans against him. Nothing happens. Nothing needs to happen. It is complete. It is a time frozen in space, yet dancing in every direction.

Perhaps this is the ultimate dance. Or maybe it is just another definition of dance as an art. I really do not know. I do know that this was a sublime performance, something very rare, something not to be forgotten.

Facts do not cease to exist because they are ignored.

Birthright offers help to prospective mothers

By GWINN DYRLAND
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Nancy Morton and her volunteer staff are neither professional counselors nor psychologists, just people who want to help. They provide counseling, referrals and a wide range of practical services to women who are pregnant and want help.

Their group is called Birthright, and what sets the organization apart from many similar services is that Birthright offers exclusively an alternative to abortion.

"We are primarily a service organization (to help women) bring their babies to term, if that's their choice," Morton said last week.

From its upstairs office at 210 N. Higgins, Birthright provides callers with temporary or long-term shelter, pregnancy tests, adoption information, counseling and legal and medical referrals to "sympathetic" professionals. All help is confidential.

"For... nine months, we will help (a pregnant woman) with anything. It's friendship, really, that we are offering," Morton said.

Birthright lacks most of the trappings of a professional organization. Its $60-a-month rented office is outfitted with tables, a couch, an old refrigerator and a few plants. Its 15 to 20 volunteers are mostly housewives whose schedules dictate Birthright's 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. office hours. Its funding comes from Christmas bake sales and individual donations.

While Birthright has no political or church connections, Morton said, it is one of 350 Birthright chapters in the United States. The organization was founded 12 years ago in Canada.

Morton said Birthright calls have grown to an average of three a day since it opened in Missoula about one year ago. Most of the women who come to Birthright are between 18- and 28-years-old, she said.

The first step in helping a caller—after determining she is pregnant—is "talking about options," Morton said. To Birthright, abortion is not an option.

"We do not make referrals for abortion. We're not here to judge or to say 'That is a horrible thing to do,' but we believe that you have another life to consider," Morton said.

Aside from its position on abortion, Birthright is ready to help prospective mothers work out whatever social and emotional problems they face, Morton said. Problems range from one woman's "How can I tell my parents?" to another woman's worries about how to support herself, with or without her child.

"Most of the girls (we see) want to keep their babies initially," Morton said. "That's not a decision they have to make (at once)."

She added that perhaps the fundamental goal of Birthright is to provide the mother with whatever security is needed to help her make important decisions without immediate financial, social or emotional pressure.

"Once she has learned that she has the support of somebody who cares about her, (her decisions) fall into focus," Morton said.

"We provide whatever help they need—if they're pregnant and have a problem."

Four Soviets cross border into China, kill herdsman

PEKING (AP)—Four armed Soviet intruders crossed into Chinese Mongolia, killed a herdsman and then began a firefight with Chinese border guards in which one of the Soviets was killed, the Chinese Foreign Ministry said yesterday. It was the first China-Soviet border incident reported in more than a year.

China lodged a "strong protest" with the Soviet Union over Sunday's incident, which Peking said began when the intruders crossed the Argun River into Inner Mongolia and tried to abduct a Chinese herdsman. The herdsman, identified as Li Zhong, resisted and was killed, and the Soviets open fire on Chinese frontier guards who had rushed to the scene, the protest note said.

It said the Chinese fired back in self-defense, killing one Soviet intruder inside China, and the three others escaped in their motorboat back to Soviet territory.

The Chinese protest, delivered to interim Soviet Charge d'affaires G. V. Kireev, declared, "In disregard of the repeated warnings of the Chinese side, the Soviet authorities now have created another incident of bloodshed along the Sino-Soviet border, killing a Chinese and encroaching on China's territorial sovereignty.

"It must be pointed out that the Soviet side is doomed to failure in its attempt to profit from creating border tension and that it must bear full responsibility for all the consequences arising therefrom," the note continued.

It demanded that Moscow "punish the culprits of this incident and stop all armed provocations along the Sino-Soviet border."

The last reported border incident between the communist giants came in July 1979, when Peking alleged that Soviet soldiers killed one Chinese and wounded another in a cross-border ambush along the Sinkiang Province frontier.

That came as the two sides were preparing to begin talks on improving relations strained during the last two decades amid Chinese charges of Soviet "imperialism."

No progress was reported in the first round of talks last fall in Moscow. Before the planned second round could begin in Peking this year, the Chinese declared that continuing the talks would be inappropriate in the wake of Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Fulbright deadline is Oct. 17

Students who wish to study next year in a foreign country have an important deadline approaching: the Oct. 17 deadline for Fulbright Scholarships applications.

University of Montana students interested in applying should immediately contact UM's Fulbright adviser Robert Acker, assistant professor of foreign languages. His office is SS 207; the phone number is 243-4358.

Applicants must have a bachelor's degree by September 1981, submit a detailed plan of their proposed study project and be proficient enough in their chosen foreign country's language to carry out the project.

Although the chosen applicants are usually awarded Fulbright Scholarships, a number of smaller scholarships offered by certain countries are also up for grabs.

Acker said the range for study projects is broad—anything from music to politics to film study.

Also, for students who feel their linguistic aptitude is lacking, some countries have intensive language courses that can be taken before the study project begins in the fall.

Grants are available in 52 foreign countries, and run through the academic year 1981-82. Most scholarships pay roundtrip air fare to the country of study, and provide a monthly allowance of $500 to $600.

Acker stressed applying as soon as possible, as a number of forms must be typed up, reviewed and then sent to the program's headquarters in New York. Each foreign country in which the proposed study plan takes place has final say on the project's approval.

Frisbee today

If one decides to stroll across the University of Montana Oval this afternoon, one should be prepared to duck some discs. Frisbee flying discs, that is.

Leisure Services Activities Director Jim Ball announced that UM student John Andre will be conducting lessons demonstrating the variety of frisbee disc games that can be played anywhere.

Andre, a UM senior and Helena native, was the winner of the fourth annual Intercollegiate Frisbee disc National Collegiate Championship held last spring in Atlanta, Ga.

"Frisbee is a very inexpensive activity that is as challenging as skills allow," Ball said.

Andre and several frisbee associates will be demonstrating frisbee games like "ultimate," "guts," frisbee golf, known as "fof," and flipping the discs for distance and accuracy.

Any interested student is invited to participate in the various games that will be demonstrated. Just be prepared to duck some discs.

Griz 'self-destruct' in loss to Boise

By PAT SULLIVAN
Montana Kaimin Sports Editor

Self-destruct mechanisms are often used by TV secret agents and starship captains to destroy themselves or their top-secret weaponry.

But University of Montana football coach Larry Donovan has discovered that crucial mistakes on the field have destroyed his football team in three games, particularly in Saturday's 44-10 loss to Boise State. UM is now 0-2 in league play and 1-3 overall.

"If we don't self-destruct we're OK," Donovan said. "Freshmen mistakes hurt us, as did seniors making freshmen mistakes."

The Grizzlies did not self-destruct as quickly in the Boise contest as they did against Idaho and Portland State.

The UM squad held the potent Boise offense scoreless in the first period and were behind only 14-3 at halftime. Last weekend, against Idaho, the Griz destroyed themselves by trailing 21-0 after only one quarter.

"We played Boise State on even terms in their stadium and against their people," Donovan said. "We knocked them around until we self-destructed."

The Grizzlies took the game's opening kickoff and marched 51 yards, using up nine minutes of the clock, until a mental mistake caused a penalty that stopped the drive. A 48-yard field goal attempt by Brian Salonen failed.

After the scoreless first quarter, Boise quarterback Joe Aliotti began shredding the injury-riddled Griz defensive secondary and tallied second-quarter touchdown passes of 7 and 25 yards.

UM was forced to shift the backfield alignment drastically following injuries to John Kovacich, Randy Laird and Scott Ellig.

Freshmen Tony Fudge, Paul Silovsky, Andre Stephens and Gary Lowery helped junior Mickey Sutton and veteran senior Jay Becker fill the four positions.

"They picked on the new guys in the secondary," Donovan said. "The backfield had an expensive lesson but I hope they learned something."

Boise added 17 points in the third quarter and 13 in the final stanza to outshine the Grizzly effort in the first half.

The three Boise quarterbacks who played in the game totaled 302 yards passing by completing 23 of 37 attempts. Boise added 265 yards rushing compared to UM's 73 yards rushing and 124 passing.

Mike Hagen added to the final Grizzly score with a three yard touchdown run with 50 seconds left in the game. The touchdown was the first for UM in 11 quarters of football.

The UM coach did see some improvement in the game, saying there was "great hustle" on the special teams and "gang tackling" by the defense.

"The offensive line finally jumped off the football," Donovan said. And although the Grizzlies only had 197 yards, they controlled the football for over 35 minutes of the hour-long contest.

"We're back on page one where we thought we were after the Simon Fraser game," Donovan said.

Donovan also said the team morale was "excellent, they know where they stand and what they have to do. We're not going to out-fancy anyone, just out-work them."

And hopefully the Grizzlies will not self-destruct in the process. UM travels to Ogden, Utah, Saturday to play Big Sky Conference leader Weber State.

Baker paces womens' cross-country

The University of Montana women's cross country team used a team effort to place fifth out of 17 teams last weekend at the Fort Casey Invitational at Whidbey Island, Wash.

Competing against a field of 194 runners, Montana's five entrants were all timed under 20 minutes. Bridgette Baker came in 20th for the Grizzlies in 18:49, followed by Linda Becker in 36th place, and Julie Glenn in 38th place. Jill Warner and Kelly Brendle balanced the team effort by taking 45th and 47th, respectively.

According to Coach Dick Koontz, his team's success was evident by the "decreased time between our number-one runner and our number-five runner."

Gretchen Goebel and Shelly Thompson were still unable to run because of injuries. Mary Reimers and Louise Bruce were also kept off the course, because of illness.

"Despite our injuries and illnesses," Koontz said, "we are still running well as a team."

The UM women will oppose at least six teams this Saturday at the University of Idaho Invitational in Moscow. Koontz said that another "super team effort" will be needed to keep the team running as strong as they have been recently.

Harriers second at Boise run

By RENATA BIRKENBUEL
Montana Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The University of Montana men's cross country team placed second to the Weber State Wildcats in a tight triangular meet Saturday in Boise Idaho.

Weber State tallied 30 points, followed by Montana with 39 and Boise State with 52.

Seven out of eight Grizzlies finished the five-mile race, but Coach Larry Heidebrecht was especially pleased with the times of the top five University of Montana finishers.

Dave Gordon placed second for UM with a time of 24:40 while Tom Raunig placed fourth in 25:05. Mike Brady finished eighth in 25:23, Brian Turner ninth in 25:24 and Greg Downing 16th in 25:59.

Heidebrecht said that Weber was "the toughest" team UM has faced this season. However, he felt the Grizzlies could have had a better chance of beating the Wildcats if Kevin Dilley, the fifth man on the UM squad, had not been out of competition with a knee injury.

"Not having a fifth man really hurt our chances," Heidebrecht said. "I think he (Dilley) would have been up there with Brady and Turner."

Heidebrecht expressed optimism about defeating Weber in the future and intends to train his team hard during the next six weeks.

"If we can beat Weber, we have a chance of getting second in the Big Sky Conference and being one of the top three (teams) in the District Seven Conference."

The Grizzlies will continue their title quest when they take on Washington State University Saturday at 10 a.m., at the UM Golf Course.

changed," Chapman said. "It's only been delayed."

But a completion date may be far in the future, as Chapman said he must get approval from the Board of Regents for the proposals, then have the plans drawn and approved, and then conduct bids.

"If we are real lucky, and I get the proposals to the Regents for their January meeting, we might get construction finished by late fall or winter of next year," Chapman said.

office will not be vindictive by not seriously considering suggested alternatives.

Jesse Bier, professor of English, said that the decision to investigate other alternatives is fine as long as the proposal to block the windows is eliminated from consideration. He said he wants to hear that the building will be modified in some other way or not at all.

The DOE grant of $180,000, written expressly for this particular proposal to cover the windows, has stipulated that the project must pay for itself within 15 years. If another alternative meeting that 15-year deadline can be agreed upon, the grant would have to be re-written and submitted to DOE for approval again.

Hauck said that UM faculty members have contacted Montana's congressional delegation to put pressure on DOE to relax the pay-back standards or defer the project. However, Hauck said that DOE officials refused to relax the standard.
